But the Republicans were wide awake and Clerk Hallock was promptly served with the writ of mandamus issued by Justice Kennedy in the Ryan-Munro contest for the Assembly. This requires him not to sign any certificate of election from the First Assembly District until further order of the Court.

Gov. Hill bases his removal of Clerk Cotton on the ground that in allowing the Republican ballots to get mixed as he did, even if he were not designedly at fault, he was guilty of negligence in regard to a vital duty. Under either construction, whether the Clerk acted from design or negligence, it is held that he was properly a subject for removal.
